≡ LISTENING TEXT

Over the past decade, social media platforms have transformed from simple communication tools into carefully chosen stages where individuals perform carefully constructed versions of their lives. For teenagers, who are at a particularly sensitive stage of identity formation, this change carries significant psychological results. Research published by the American Psychological Association in 2023 found that teenagers who spent more than three hours daily on image-based platforms such as Instagram and TikTok were twice as likely to report symptoms of low self-esteem and body dissatisfaction compared to those who used social media for less than one hour per day.

LISTENING TEXT

What makes social media especially powerful, and especially dangerous, is the mechanism of social comparison. Unlike traditional media, where the gap between ordinary people and celebrities is obvious, social media has hidden this gap completely. Teenagers are now comparing themselves not only to distant celebrities, but to classmates, acquaintances, and influencers who present their lives as easily perfect.

LISTENING TEXT

Over the past decade, social media platforms have transformed from simple communication tools into carefully chosen stages where individuals perform carefully constructed versions of their lives. For teenagers, who are at a particularly sensitive stage of identity formation, this change carries significant psychological results. Research published by the American Psychological Association in 2023 found that teenagers who spent more than three hours daily on image-based platforms such as Instagram and TikTok were twice as likely to report symptoms of low self-esteem and body dissatisfaction compared to those who used social media for less than one hour per day.

What makes social media especially powerful, and especially dangerous, is the mechanism of social comparison. Unlike traditional media, where the gap between ordinary people and celebrities is obvious, social media has hidden this gap completely. Teenagers are now comparing themselves not only to distant celebrities, but to classmates, acquaintances, and influencers who present their lives as easily perfect.

Psychologists use the term highlight-reel effect to describe this phenomenon: what appears online is a selective, filtered, and strategically timed part of reality, yet viewers instinctively treat it as a complete and accurate picture.

1 Answer these questions :

According to the text, how have social media platforms changed over the past decade?

---

Find evidence that spending long periods on image-based social media may be associated with a more negative self-image among teenagers.

---

---

What term do psychologists use to describe the selective posting of perfect moments?

---

---

Based on the idea of the highlight-reel effect, suggest two practical ways teenagers can avoid judging their own lives unfairly when using social media.

---

---

2 Read the information, then decide whether the statement is True (T) or False (F). Justify your answer.

1. Teenagers on social media compare themselves only with distant celebrities.

|               |  |
|---------------|--|
| True          |  |
| False         |  |
| Justification |  |

2. The passage describes teenagers as being at an especially sensitive stage in developing their identity.

|               |  |
|---------------|--|
| True          |  |
| False         |  |
| Justification |  |

3 Read the social-media post, then answer the questions.

THE POST

Post from FitBeforeFive: "Everyone who truly cares about well-being should join our 5 a.m. running club. Members sharing sunrise photos show strong commitment to their routine." The club welcomes beginners, yet the post ignores people working late, caring for relatives, or managing health conditions. It also presents one routine as the only sign of commitment.

Identify two expressions that show the writer's viewpoint. Explain why one of them may make some readers feel judged.

---

Analyze how the post could affect students who cannot attend the 5 a.m. running club. Use at least two details from the text in your answer.
